

As a regular listener of K-LOVE radio (an FM station which is often heard on FM translators) I strongly oppose the FCC expanding service to Low Power FM (LPFM). My understanding is that these stations will take priority over current FM translator service (such as the station I listen to -- K-LOVE).

Our family has a financial stake in the FCC's decision. We have consistently supported K-LOVE, a listener-supported radio station, for over a decade. It's literally the only radio station that our family listens to together.

K-LOVE has served me as a resident of the local community. We waited years for K-LOVE to expand their broadcasting area to Austin. Now that they're here, we don't want to lose it to expanded LPFM broadcast service.

There is great value in K-LOVE, a national and regional FM service, to me and my family. If an LPFM station were to replace K-LOVE, my wife, our children, and I wouldn't have an alternative to the positive and encouraging radio station that we currently listen to without worrying about offensive or inappropriate programming.

K-LOVE's programming provides an important service by providing positive and encouraging programming song lyrics, DJ speech, commercials, etc.). It's literally the only radio station that we can listen to that reflects our values and which broadcasts safe, non-objectionable material.
